"I. O." Reading Course

1. Based on a superficial scanning of the sample materials and prospectus of the proposed I. O. reading course, I suggest:

a. that it be reduced to one week of general orientation;

b. that it be introduced by orientation lectures, [REDACTED] style;

c. that the daily menu be reading-lecture-discussion-reading (in preparation for next day);

d. that the written material be presented in straightforward, expository form, not as a verbatim transcription of lectures; and that the written material provide basic facts and discussion of facts which can be highlighted by a subsequent lecture including examples, etc.

e. that the secondary objective - American Thesis - be dropped.

2. The questions suggested as a means of testing or guiding the study appear to be sound.

3. I feel very strongly that we must make a careful distinction in our OTR courses between orientation and training.
